Dear Ms. Dortch:

On October 11, 2007, Mr. Michael Amarosa, of TruePosition, Inc., accompanied by Philip L. Verveer and the undersigned, of Willkie Farr & Gallagher LLP, met with Mr. Bruce Gottlieb, Legal Advisor to Commissioner Copps to discuss issues raised in the above-referenced docket. Specifically, Mr. Amarosa expressed TruePosition's confidence in the assertions and data provided in its pleadings filed in response to the Commission's Notice of Proposed Rulemaking ("NPRM") in this proceeding.¹ Mr. Amarosa reiterated that the Commission's goal in this proceeding should be material improvement -- not perfection -- and that nearly all commenters expressed confidence that improvements can be made. The Commission's focus should be on whether the levels of improvement that can be attained are worth the investments that would be made by technology companies, carriers, and consumers.

In addition, Mr. Amarosa pointed out that there are several issues related to wireless E911 deployment that are not covered by the NPRM, but deserve the Commission's attention. Mr. Amarosa suggested that these subjects, as well as subjects raised in the NPRM, could form the foundation for an FCC-convened forum bringing together the various wireless E911 stakeholders, including the wireless carriers, the public safety community, state and federal policymakers, and the technology companies that develop and deploy location-based services. Mr. Amarosa noted that TruePosition has been proposing a stakeholder forum for some time, and continues to support the proposal.
